Theme: Targeting iRhom2 – a new paradigm for the treatment of autoimmune diseases

SciRhom develops first-in-class therapeutic antibodies against iRhom2, As a key regulator of TACE, iRhom2 activates several pro-inflammatory pathways, including TNF-alpha signaling. Our antibodies allow to simultaneously block these disease-causing pathways, promising significant improvement over current autoimmune therapies.

Oral therapies are becoming increasingly common in oncology and require inter-professional patient management, with close communication with the care team critical to treatment success. eHealth Support improves treatment adherence, patient satisfaction, and prognosis.
